No Baking!

Eva and her big sister Sofia were doing homework in the kitchen. Suddenly, Eva said, "Oh no!"

"What's wrong?" Sofia asked.

"The bake sale is tomorrow," Eva said. "I promised to bring something."

"Yikes," Sofia said. "We can't use the oven when Mom and Dad aren't here. And they won't be home until late."

"But I have to bake something! I promised."

"Wait a minute," Sofia said. "Maybe you can bring something that isn't baked."

"Huh? It's a bake sale."

"Hold on." Sofia pulled out a cookbook and flipped through the pages. "Here! No-Bake Peanut Butter Balls." She showed the page to Eva.

"Peanut butter, oats, chocolate chips . . ." Eva read out loud. "We have all this! It's perfect!"

They put everything in a bowl and mixed it together into a batter. Then they rolled the batter into balls.

Mom and Dad came home just as they were cleaning up. "Oh no!" Dad said. "We forgot about the bake sale."

"Don't worry," Eva said. She showed her parents the peanut butter balls. "Just because it's a bake sale doesn't mean you have to bake!"

Look at the picture. Which part of the story does it show?

- A. Eva shows Mom the peanut butter balls.
- B. Eva and Sofia gather things to make peanut butter balls.
- C. Eva and Sofia do homework in the kitchen.

Who is the narrator of the story?

My rug by the window was warm and soft. Chewing on my favorite bone, I curled up in the sunlight. I was looking forward to a calm, quiet day.

I was happily chasing rabbits in my dreams when the doorbell rang.

"Oh no," I thought, waking up fast. "It's puppy-sitting day!"

The puppy charged in, jumped on my back, and then pulled at my tail. So much for calm and quiet!

- A. a puppy
- B. a person
- C. an adult dog

How do the children feel?

Grow a Dragon

Marlon plopped down onto a bench in the garden.

"You seem grumpy. What's wrong?" Grandma asked. She was weeding her balloon plant. The colorful bunches of balloon blossoms bounced in front of her face.

"The Dragon Parade."

"Ah."

"It's in two days! Nia and Kent and, well, all my friends are going. With their dragons."

Grandma picked a teacup flower. "Tea? It might help you feel better." She handed Marlon the flower cup of steaming tea.

"Only one thing will make me feel better," Marlon whispered.

"I know. But dragons—"

"Cost a lot." Marlon sighed.

"Right. And it's not like you can just grow one."

Marlon looked around his grandmother's garden. "Wait," he said slowly. "Maybe I can! May I look through your seed box?"

What is probably true about Grandma's seeds? Look for clues in the story.

- A. They are the same seeds that Nia's and Kent's families have.
- B. They are the seeds that always grow into balloon plants.
- C. They are magic seeds that grow into unusual plants.

Read the passage about seaweed.

There are lots of amazing things at the bottom of the sea. You can find sand, shells, and even old ships. You can also find a yummy snack. It's called seaweed.

Seaweed needs both sunlight and salty water to grow. Most kinds of seaweed also need rocks to grow on. The rocks help the seaweed stay in one place.

There are many different kinds of seaweed. The kinds people can eat are sometimes called sea vegetables. Most seaweed has a salty flavor. But some seaweed tastes a little sweet.

Seaweed is often wrapped around fish and rice. It is also delicious in salads. Dried seaweed tastes great in soups and sauces. Some people even eat dried seaweed instead of potato chips. It's the perfect snack for a picnic at the beach!

Why does seaweed often grow on rocks?

- A. Rocks hide the seaweed from hungry fish. B. Rocks are salty and block the sunlight.
- C. Rocks keep the seaweed in one place.
